DAILY LEADER.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL FOREST.

An Interview with him.

(Correspondence of the New Orleans Free Press.)

MARSHAL, Miss., May 13, '65.

Before the large chimney pieces of a small cabin room, surrounded by a group of Confederate officers and men, the room lighted by a small tallow candle, I first saw Lieutenant General N. B. Forrest, commanding a corps of cavalry in the rebel army.

Forrest is a man of fine appearance about six feet high dark plowing hair, eyes carefully trimmed moustache and chin whiskers, dark as night finely cut features and iron-gray hair. His form is lithe, powerfully indicating great physical activity and power. He was neatly dressed in a simple, somber gray mixture, the only indication of rank being the usual number of small stars on his coat sleeves. He had a sword at his belt, but no epaulettes or insignia. A child can appraise him of his personal satisfaction. Only 75 years old, he is in excellent condition.
